

Globe Trotters

This new team game from Re-energize is an ideal format as part of a team building, motivational, incentive or reward programme.

The team's objective is to arrive in Australia (10,000 miles away!) for a 2 week holiday but the crunch is that they are starting with absolutely nothing - no money, no passport and no transport!

In order to gain all the necessary items to travel to Australia, the teams must visit various countries around the world, completing exercises and collecting items on the way. Their 'travel' is controlled by a large and colourful map, showing all the possible destinations. The teams must move their 'foot marker' to the country they wish to visit on the World Map, before being taken there by their 'Guide'.

Once at the country the Guide will outline the exercise associated with that country and on completing it successfully, in the time allocated, will allow the team to select items which will include Tickets, Passport, Insurance and so on as well as mode of transport from one country to another to help them get to Australia.

Each country has several different themed exercises - for example, the teams may choose to visit the West Indies and take on the 'Island Hopping' challenge or Tokyo to attempt the "Traffic Jam" exercise. The individual exercises are a brand new mixture of logical, cerebral and practical tasks, each requiring varying degrees of planning, communication and teamwork. The teams must try and visit as many countries as they can, and collect as many travel items as possible within the given time.

Traffic Jam - TOKYO

As soon as a team thinks it has all the required items for each team member and transportation or when the event time has elapsed they have to go through Passport Control to see whether they have satisfied the criteria to arrive at Sydney airport and take that holiday!
